Growing up

For most part everyone's childhood is the most favorite part of their lives, but there are those that have would consider others as favorites. My mom's childhood was pretty self-dependent. She wasn't dependent on anyone. She also had a lot of responsibility on her shoulders after her mom died. My mom was the oldest of her three siblings. She had two sisters and one brother. After her mom passed away, she became the mother figure to her little siblings. As far as her studies went she earned good education and got a bachelor's degree. while she was in highschool she met my dad which totally changed her life.

Marriage

our wedding day is the most important part of our lives. well my mom is no other person, her marriage day was also one of her favorite days. Though her marriage day was one of her favorite days but there is a story that led up to it. They were good friends at first and then they fell in love and got married later. My mom was 23 when she got married. There marriage went by really fast. That's because just the day after they got engaged, they got married. Just a few years later my dad moved here with his dad. The long distance didn't really effect their relationship, in fact it made their love even stronger.

Being alone

Being alone in India was pretty hard. Even though we were alone there, we had pretty much everything. We had this mother-daughter relationship that could survive anything, in fact we did survive everything. It was actually really fun there. We almost always had people by our sides who helped us. We always took each other in consideration before making any decisions. That really helped us get out of problems.

Moving here

Moving here was hard; it was hard on both of us. Since we had each other we made it through. Moving here changed a lot of things. The climate change, environment change, and the lifestyle change. Well the lifestyle change wasn't really a big deal because it wasn't really a big change. As far as weather went that was really hard. It took us awhile to get used to the cold weather but after that then it wasn't a big deal either. Even after moving here we moved a lot until we moved to Greenville and bought this house.

Summary

So overall, my mom has always been a idol to me and she always will be. She has always been there for me. She has followed all roles a woman very well. She's is a great mother, daughter, and wife. There are no words I could use to describe her. She is my personal hero.
