Motorcycle races at Road America. I love this annual event – the Vintage Motorcycle races! Every year I go with my family and my dad. It's remarkable how far motorcycles have come over the past 100+ years. One of the coolest things is watching electric motorcycles zoom by at over 90 miles per hour; they're quiet AND they don't burn fossil fuels, which reduces the amount of CO2 emitted in the atmosphere and hopefully will help curb the negative impacts of global warming.

Wagons HO! I got to experience my 4th "History on the Move" wagon train reenactment on June 22 with my son, Terran, daughter, Renna, and my brother-in-law, Shane. We only rode 10 miles on a wagon, and it was pretty easy and fairly comfortable. I couldn't help but think about how difficult it actually would have been during the westward expansion. 10 miles would have been a great day depending on the terrain and whether a good wagon path had been cleared.

My kids and I started building a play fort off of their swing set in the back yard. Talk about having to put my math skills to the test: estimating lumber, cost, time, angles, inches and fractions of an inch. Whew, time to sharpen the pencil again!
