Dear Readers:

It has taken a long time for this magazine to be released to the public and I have wanted to let you know why I have taken the time to make this magazine.

First the reason it was made was to let people have some respect for video games. Why people love them so much and how video games can be useful, stuff like Cool math games on the computer because it's education.

Halo because it's really famous. I have gotten very many and different people to come and work on this magazine. There are lots of articles that have to do with video games.

I have lots of goals that I have been trying to accomplish like get all As. in every class and get a better score in gym stuff like that. I love to run and swimming I would like to run faster and longer same with swimming. Those are just some personal goals for me.

While we were making this magazine some people have been asking if they could change what they're doing for my project and there have been some arguments as well like some people have been yelling at me for not changing them to do something else or I won't let them quit because of the contract.

I have also seen people who are awesome at making advertisements or articles for my magazines. I have had some struggles to get people to do things for me as well.

I have seen incredible facts and amazing entries on some of the articles and also I have read a lot of quotes that people have been saying about my article.

I thank you readers. I just wanted to give you some of my thoughts. Thanks for reading.

Sincerely,

Jason Huang

Mario bros. Gamer test

It may come as a shock to some of you that most gamers today cannot finish the original Super Mario Brothers game on the Favicon. We have conducted this test over the past few years to see how difficult we should make our games and have found that the number of people unable to finish the first level is steadily increasing.

This year, around 90 percent of the test participants were unable to complete the first level of Super Mario Brothers. We did not assist them in any way except by providing the exact same instruction manual we used back then. Many of them did not read it and the few that did stop after the first page which did not cover any of the game mechanics.

We watched the replay videos of how the gamers performed and saw that many did not understand simple concepts like bottomless pits. Around 70 percent died to the first Goomba. Another 50 percent died twice. Many thought the coins were enemies and tried to avoid them. Also, most of them did not use the run button.

we asked for suggestions on how to improve the game. A majority of them wanted the game to be easier and they suggested many ways to do this. Some of them wanted a mandatory tutorial while others wanted more ways to kill things besides jumping on them. We explained that Mario could shoot fire balls with the Fire Flower power-up, but then they wanted Mario to start with more weapons like a sword or a gun.

Some of the people seemed to be unaware that this was an actual old game that existed as they asked if the retro-style graphics were supposed to be a throwback to old Nintendo games. Some missed the point of the questionnaire completely and said that the graphics and music were terrible and needed to be improved in order for the game to sell. They also wanted a deeper storyline and voice acting.

So, as a stockholder, you should be relieved to know that our games are easier in order to attract a wider audience. As a gamer, you might feel a little sad, and you should be. It is quite sad.

Young Boy Claims to See the Legendary Pokémon: Ho-Oh.

By Jordan Huang

10-year-old Ash Ketchum claims to have seen the legendary Ho-Oh while attempting to escape from an angry flock of Sparrows with his injured Pikachu. The young boy stated that he and his Pokémon had blacked out after taking a fall, waking up later to witness something that few humans will ever see.

The young Pokémon trainer was just setting out on an adventure many children begin once coming of age: the journey to become a Pokémon Master. Ash claimed that, after receiving his first Pokémon and setting out on his journey, things weren't quite going as planned. "Pikachu was disinclined to acquiesce my numerous requests, and I tried to take matters into my own hands by battling a nearby Sparrow," said Ash during interview. In a terrified attempt to escape the angry swarm of birds, the young trainer was forced to pilfer the bicycle of another young trainer by the name of Misty, who happened to be fishing nearby. "I don't care what happened to him," she grumbled in discontent, "If that twerp has wrecked my bike, he's gonna be in for a world of pain!"

Unfortunately for the young water trainer, Ash had already destroyed her bicycle in a fevered attempt to escape the angry Sparrows. As the birds circled, and the fresh trainer braced fearing death, his Pikachu sprang up and baffled the swarm with a flash of lightning, knocking out itself and its master as well. As the clouds parted and the duo awoke from their loss of consciousness, they claimed they were greeted with the most extravagant of sights. Ash believed that he saw the legendary Ho-Oh hovering over the forest as the sun rose over the horizon, and, though few choose to believe him, little can be said about what really happened on this adventurous day.

Ash Ketchum, the boy who claimed to see the legendary Pokémon, with his trusted Pikachu.

Misty, a witness to Ash's escape from the Sparrows, is also a young trainer with a love for water Pokémon.

Dear Jason Huang

The thing that I like about Jason's magazine is that it gives you all the information about your favorite games. Jason has a whole bunch of good information about games and pictures of the games. He is a good editor for his magazine because he has ads and he has all the articles spread out all over the magazine. He also got a lot of help from his friends and workers.

Sincerely,

Zachary Wahlfeld

Dear Magazine editor:

I just recently read your last magazine issue. Upon reading it, I had a major disagreement with your “fact” about the best games. You confidently stated that, quote “The best game series ever is Halo.” I have reason and evidence that in most copies ever bought for one gaming franchise is Legend of Zelda. This popular series having over 6 entries, including Ocarina of Time, Majora’s Mask, Twilight Prince, and more. Having played all of these games as a young child with my older brother on the GameCube. I have to disagree. with your “fact.”

Halo 4 News

Halo 4 has been around for so long (2 years) people have started to wonder how the next game is going to be. The halo series all revolve around master chief, a super soldier who has been fighting the war for years and years.

Assassins Creed IV Black Flag News

Assassin's Creed IV Black Flag has been around for a little while as well and some people were disappointed in the death of Desmond Miles.

A young adult that was kidnapped by the Templars and was forced to help but then escaped and started fighting them.

Mass Effect 3 News

Mass Effect 3 was a shocking experience for fans who beat the game and were confused about the ending of commander shepard of what you had to choose to do now fans are wondering how the next game is going to turn out for them.

Gears of War News

Gears of war is a 3rd person shooter games that revolves around 4 individuals that are sent to kill these very nasty creatures called the Locust. The team is made up of Marcus the main character Dom Marcuse's personal friend Cole a thrashba super star and very smart bad attitude and smart alek Baird.

Xbox News

All of these games are my personal favorite games to play on the Xbox 360 and the Xbox one. Speaking of the Xbox some fans have been complaining about how the Xbox One is not backwards compatible and how the console is being hacked.

It's lagging so the creators are trying to find a way to make the fans and families happy. So far they have found no evidence that the console has been hacked and that some people have just been making up rumors about it.

They have also been complaining about how expensive it is but it's a brand new console and the creators are saying that it's fair for a brand new console deserves to be that much money.

Video Games; Then and Now

By Jeanne Campbell

I remember playing Super Mario World for the Super Nintendo gaming system with my boys years ago. It was so much fun going through the different levels trying to collect coins and mushrooms (also known as 'big's). We would finish all the levels in one world and wait to see what the next world would be like.

Trying not to get hit by turtle shells or Goombas seemed quite easy back then. I even remember the boys asking for my help when trying to beat the big boss, Bowser. They would look at me as if I was the Queen of the video games.

Now I find myself watching more than playing and when I do pick up a controller, I'm the one needing the help 'beating the big boss'. They don't seem to mind helping me out when I need it. They truly enjoy playing video games with me, however I'm not into the new style of games, so we don't play together very much anymore. I've also found I'm not as interested in playing video games as I used to be years ago. Life goes on and we all grow up, or do we?

This past Christmas the boys said there was a new game out they thought I would really enjoy playing. They said we could all play it together traffic on a Saturday afternoon, and purchase one of the last copies. When I looked at the cover I found it strangely familiar. It was Super Mario World Wii. It didn't quite click until I started to play. Up to four people could play instead of just two and all four people could play at the same time, on the same screen. Needless to say I was skeptical but I figured why not give it a try, and I picked up a controller.

In not too long a time we were all laughing hysterically. I also found myself gripping the controller with such force my hands hurt. The inner child woke up inside of me and I had the best time of my life. Nintendo had taken an old classic game and made it new again. The added features also made it more entertaining than ever. Nintendo also gave me an opportunity to reconnect with my boys in a way I had not done in quite a long time.

A big 'Thank You' goes out to Nintendo and an even bigger 'Thank You' goes out to the best kids in the world. They never gave up on me and my ability to collect one more 'BIG'.

and it would be a lot of fun. So they called around looking for it one day and finally found copy on the other side of town. We jumped in the car, drove through

How my little brother got thrown out of a window.

By a French toaster

So, this is how it all started. I was sitting in my room looking through a gaming magazine in one morning and I saw an ad for the new Mario game that I had been dying to get, but instead of the normal price of the game, which was 49.99, the price was only 25 dollars, but only for one day only. I was so pumped! I went around my room looking around for any spare coins or bills, and when was finally done scavenging, I had 26 dollars and 37 cents, just enough to buy my game. I headed down stairs to find my mom when I noticed my brother was screwing around with my brand new Nintendo 64.

“Don’t break my N64!” I yelled at my brother over my shoulder as I ran into the kitchen.

“MOM!” I yelled “the new Mario game is only 25 dollars, but only for one day, can we go can we go can we go can we go can we go?” and after my mom calmed me down she said that we could go. When we got to the strip mall the local game store was in, I ran through crowd of people with my mom trying to keep up. I barged through the doors and there was a LONG line. I waited for 30 minutes to get to the front of the line. And when I finally got there, our conversation went a little like this.

“GIMIE DA NEW MARIO GAME!”

“Umm what did you say sir?”

“I WANT THE NEW MARIO GAME!”

“Umm, ok... that will be 20 dollars.

After my mom calmed me down enough so I could take my wallet out of my pocket, I paid the cashier and ran into the hall. My mom asked me if I wanted something to eat from the food court, but I just wanted to get home. We pulled into my drive way and I ran into my house and bolted into my living room, and what I found shocked me. My brother was standing over my N64 with a massive hole in it holding a broken controller. After I saw that what followed was a terrifying scene of me chasing my brother around my house 5 times and finally cornered him in my room. And I will say I lost my temper (and potentially my sanity) but, that’s how my brother got thrown out of a window

Video games Combined with Music

Music is a huge deal in this world everything is music. You got Rock and Heavy Metal and hip and all of that. There is so much music they had to take one more step and make video games using music Guitar Hero and Just Dance and those drum set and mike and all of that.

There is just so much music in this world it's amazing. All of the games you ever play in your life there will be music Pacman, Sonic, Mario Halo, Star Wars, Metroid, Gears of War, and so much more. It never ends every day all of the bands in the entire world is playing music. Every day a new song is played or made.

The video games are the ones with the music. Each game has like 5-20 songs in each game. It is crazy how big music has gotten in the video game genre. YouTube has so much music and YouTube has video game gameplay and people think it's boring with just sound effects so they added their own personal music in the game. Those are the two things that go together.

Video games and music it's all about the music. I am just so wowed how much music and video games there are.

Many Games with music and that are pretty famous
